

Foreman of Camp 2 -

SEP 61

THE J. F. BYRNE covered space is the latest home for the Wild West

Wife of William J. Byrne

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

and their family

THE HOUSE

THE HOUSE

THE HOUSE

THE HOUSE

THE HOUSE

The house was a small, one-story building with a thatched roof. It was surrounded by a high wall and a small garden. The house was built on a hill and was the only building of its kind in the village. The garden was filled with various plants and flowers, and there was a small stream flowing through it. The house was built by a man who had come from the city and had brought with him many new ideas and ways of thinking. He had built the house as a place where he could live and work, and he had made it a place where he could share his ideas with the people of the village. The house was a symbol of progress and change, and it was a place where the people of the village could see the future.

